

Abstract

A condom for use on a natural or artificial penis. The condom comprises a single body with two different shaped sections. One section is an elongated generally tubular section and has a closed end. The other section extends from the first section and is shaped to fit a scrotum of a user. A gripper on the second section is near the open end. The gripper expands to fit over the penis and scrotum and to contract to fit snugly between the scrotum and the body of the user. A package for multiple condoms has a slanted front with tear tab for easy access. The condoms are protected and less noticeable than when kept in a pocket.
